Mechatronics is an important new trend in mechanical engineering: seeking to teach mechanical engineers to understand both the electronic systems that control their machines, and more importantly, how to design the entire electromechanical system as a whole. Old-fashioned mechanical engineers simply designed the machine, and then sent it off to electrical engineers to design the sensors and controls that would make the machine work. Smaili/Mrad address the fundamental issue of mechatronics by integrating the electrical and machine components into the design concept.
